TWELVE MAPS RELATING TO ANCIENT HISTORY

BY

H. KIEPERT.

BERLIN,
DIETRICH REIMER
(ERNST VOHSEN).

The accompanying Index contains all the ancient geographical names contained in the maps with an explanation of their character, and where it seemed necessary, the non-classical and modern equivalents; also the number of the Map and the marginal letters of the squares upon which the places are to be found on the maps. Where a place occurs in more than one map the reference in the Index is confined to the map which is on the largest scale and gives most detail, whence the place can easily be traced on the other maps. A separate Index is given at the end for the topographical details of Map IX which contains plans of the city of Rome. A few particulars which do not speak for themselves may be added here.

All such names as occur in Greek and Roman literature are printed in ordinary type; names taken from other sources (such as Sanscrit, Bactrian, Old Persian, Armenian, Syrian, Hebreo-Phoenician, Egyptian, Etruscan) are given in thick Egyptian type.

The abbreviations of topographical terms are those universally recognised and are given in Latin, in accordance with the use of this language in the maps, for the convenience of the non-German public. Inhabited towns are not, as a rule, specially designated as such, except where it seemed necessary to add op. (= oppidum) to distinguish it from an island, river or mountain of the same name, or where it was desirable to indicate its historical connexion with the country to which it does not belong geographically, — as op. gr. (= oppidum graecum); op. ph. (= oppidum phoenicium). Geographical synonyms are given either in parentheses or connected by an s. (sive); v. does not stand for vel, but invariably for vide in reference to other names.

In order to indicate the precise situation of the places we have added (in abbreviation) the name of the countries under their collective name — as Ariana, Graecia, Italia, Gallia etc. — and, in parentheses, the name of the special district. On the other hand two or three names of countries following each other, not in brackets, denote that the place is connected with both or all; this in the case of mountains or large rivers is at once obvious, and sometimes becomes necessary from disagreements in the ancient authorities, or from the historical changes that have taken place in the boundaries. Thus, for instance, Gall. Germ. following the name of a place signifies that it is situated on the uncertain boundary of these two countries, or that it has belonged to them both at different times; on the other hand Gall. (Germ.) signifies a place situated in that part of the great Roman province of Gallia which from the time of Augustus bore the name of Germania (cisrhenana). An i. following a name denotes that the name is that of an island, while the same letter in parentheses (i.) denotes that the place is situated on an island, the name of which then follows.

All statements referring to modern or, in fact, to post-classical times are printed in italics; the abbreviation rud. (rudera) is used among the topographical terms for places that are no longer inhabited and in ruins, and as such ruins can frequently be named only from their proximity to some neighbouring place, the signs j. (juxta) or pr. (prope) are often added. Mere appellations, without any distinguishing surname for the remains of ancient towns (such as the Italian Cività or Castelvecchio, the modern Greek Palaeókastron, the Turkish Eski-Kalé, Ören- or Viránschehr, the Arabian Khírbe, Kharaba etc.) have been omitted as unimportant. In order that such ancient names as have come down to us unaltered or but little changed, and thus possess an historical interest, may be distinguished from those that have of late been reintroduced from a patriotic interest in antiquity by modern Greeks, Italians & Spaniards — the latter are placed within cornered brackets, thus [—].

Modern names naturally retain their national mode of spelling only when belonging to languages which make use of our alphabet (as the Romanic and Germanic, Polish, Croatian and Magyar). In transcribing other names — hence more especially Greek, Albanian, Servio-Bulgarian, Turkish, Armenian, Persian, Indian, Arabic, as well as all ancient names derived from oriental languages — a mode of spelling universally intelligible has been adopted for the sake of non-German students. Thus, in particular, the letters ch and j which are pronounced very differently in German from what they are in English and French, had to be avoided, and kh and y used instead. In like manner the consistent use of s for the sharp sound (expressed in German by sz, ss) of z for the softer sound (in German indicated at the beginning of a syllable by the long s, ſ), has been adopted for the convenience of the English and French system of orthography. On the other hand the sch which causes foreigners no difficulty and is even frequently made use of by French linguists, could unhesitatingly be retained, as also tsch for the French tch or the English ch; the corresponding softer sound, however, according to the French system, is expressed by dj (= English j).

An exception to this systematic attempt to reproduce the actual pronunciation will be found in the Old Testament names (particularly in Map III); we have, in this case retained the forms used in the current translations, although these at times differ widely from their Hebrew equivalents. We have, moreover, in the first instance followed the German version. This unphilological method of transcribing names particularly affects the fine distinctions in the Semitic sibilants, for the Lutheran translation uniformly gives merely an s for ś, š, š, š, in place of the z, s, and sch of our form of transcription; on the other hand z (ç or the sharper form of s) is irrationally rendered by z (in the manner of the German sound of = ts). Hence the letters z and s in the ordinary German version and in the ancient (Graeco-Roman) method of Spelling Palestine names, have exactly the opposite value, a fact to be remembered when comparing the different forms of the names. As some translations (for instance the English Authorised Version) make a distinction between the sh (שׁ) and the simple traditional s, it has seemed advisable to mark the difference in the maps and the text by placing an accent on the ś of Hebrew names printed in thick Egyptian type, whereas in names from other languages the full sch has been retained.

The vowels have in all cases the same value as in the pure German or Italian pronunciation, and their quantity is marked only where there might be some uncertainty. That this is done by different signs as ā and á is merely a matter of typographical convenience. The accentuation independent of quantity is given in the case of such modern names as are frequently or generally pronounced with an incorrect accentuation.

For the assistance of the less experienced reader we add an alphabetical list of the names of the different countries for which abbreviations are given, although for the most part these are intelligible by themselves.
